

Ashley and Mary-Kate share 'a life'

While at Disneyworld, I met and interviewed Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen, the twin stars of the hit television comedy "Full House." They share the part of Michelle Tanner. Because they are twins, they take turns playing the same part. But they will soon play separate characters in their new musical detective home video series "The Adventures of Mary-Kate and Ashley." They just filmed a segment at Sea World and are trying to figure out what makes dolphins talk on this segment.

Talking to twins was sort of confusing, but I got a few things straight. They are eight years old and in third grade at school. They are both privately tutored and home schooled. One of the twins would like to be an animal trainer when she grows up. (Guess she'll teach seals to balance balls on their noses.) The other twin doesn't know what she'd like to become when she grows up. (Sorry, I'm not sure who said what.) Their nine-year-old brother, Trent, doesn't act, but their sister, Elizabeth, does small parts and seems to have an interest in acting.

Their personalities are very different. Mary-Kate is more serious than Ashley. However, they both enjoy acting, singing and baseball. Mary-Kate prefers horseback riding and Ashley likes dancing. And, no, they were not dressed alike. Mary-Kate wore a deep green sweatshirt over a skirt and Ashley wore a one-piece flowered jumpsuit. Both girls looked incredibly cute.

When I asked about their future plans they said they have none except to continue the "Full House" show, do a feature in the spring and the new "Adventures of Mary-Kate and Ashley" detective series. But they don't need plans. With all their talent they'll become more and more famous and popular, no matter what they do next.
